Health Ethics: Changing the Spotlight

November 3rd, 2023 | Time: 9:00AM - 1:00PM PST

Please note this event will not be recorded*

This symposium aims to create a space for perspectives that have been marginalized and excluded from health ethics conversations. The goal is to open a conversation that can contrast and bring representation of diverse ways of thinking about life and what is important in order to start asking the right questions when faced with ethical issues, specifically in the context of healthcare. Our speakers for this year will be:

LISA BOVIN

Dr. Bovin is a member of the Deninu Kų́ę First Nation in Denendeh (Northwest Territories). She is a Post-Doctoral Fellow at KITE (Toronto Rehab Research Institute). Dr. Bovin uses participatory image-based workshops to educate healthcare providers and researchers about the colonial barriers Indigenous patients navigate in the current healthcare system. She strives to humanize clinical medicine as she situates her art in the Indigenous continuum of passing knowledge through images.

Lisa Campo-Engelstein

Dr Campo-Engelstein is the Harris L. Kempner Chair in the Humanities in Medicine Professor, Professor and Chair, Department of Bioethics and Health Humanities and Director, Institute for Bioethics and Health Humanities. Trained in Philosophy, she approaches topics in medicine from a feminist and queer perspective. She is particularly interested in how cultural norms, especially gender norms, influence science and medicine and vice versa.

Camisha Russell

Dr. Russell is an Associate Professor in the Department of Philosophy at the University of Oregon and a Co-Editor of Hypatia: A Journal of Feminist Philosophy. She specializes in Bioethics, Critical Philosophy of Race, and Feminist Philosophy. She has authored various publications, including a book entitled 'The Assisted Reproduction of Race' on the role of the race in practices surrounding assisted reproductive technologies and argues for the benefits of thinking of race itself as a technology. She is also the 2020-2021 recipient of the Baruch A Brody Award and Lecture in Bioethics.

Joe Stramondo

Dr. Stramondo is an Associate Professor of Philosophy and Humanities at San Diego State University, where he also serves as Director of the Institute for Ethics and Public Affairs and Interim Chair of the Department of Classics and Humanities. He has published more than 30 papers and book chapters and is currently developing a book manuscript titled 'The Ethics of Choosing Disability'.
